EXAM PAPER: Exploring Networked Culture DENC, efterår 2014

THE EXAM PAPER

- The students can choose a topic of their own choice for the exam paper.
- The projects for the exam papers must be individual.
- The projects must be empirical (it is up to the student to choose from qualitative, quantitative or mixed-methods approaches).
- The exam paper can be written in Danish or English.
- Formally this is known as C: Hand-in exam.

TOPIC

- Choose a topic for your exam paper on your own but within the topic of Networked Culture.
- To make sure that the topic is within Networked Culture use 6-8 references from the first and second part of the specialization (i.e. Digitale kulturer and Exploring Networked Culture). Your exam paper should also include references that you found on your own.
- When you choose your topic, keep in mind that the exam paper must include an empirical part.

FORMAT

- 15-20 pages – normalsider / 36000 - 48000 anslag incl. mellemrum (2400 anslag per side), med 12 pitch og halvanden linieafstand; the list of references is not included.
- The exam paper should include an abstract of about 150 words.
- All sections must be numbered and given a title.
- If you use figures, tables or screenshots, make sure that they show the important points. The figures, tables and screenshots should be numbered sequentially and referenced in the text.
- Use APA style for in-text references. The open source software Zotero can help you to manage your references.
- Include a bibliography at the end of your paper, where you list all references used in the paper. There should only be one list of references, meaning that references to academic books, journal articles, blogs, newspaper articles, games etc should all go in the same list.
- Remember to use the standardforsiden when you hand in.
