Scientific focus and more

My research areas are digital media and communication with a dual focus on young people and their digital environments, digital practices, and digital citizenship respectively the impact of digitization and digital media on transformations in the digital society. The research comprehends studies on children's and young people's everyday life with media, digital literacy, and digital welfare. This connects to studies of processes of change related to digital media and democracy, with a focus on digital media and trust, democratic literacy, media literacy, informed citizenship, and participation. I have substantial experience with research management, and I am a certified Research Leader. Over the past decades, I have also led strategic research initiatives and research groups and presently a research centre. I am a member of ITU's Research Ethics Committee and serve on EUs Horizon Europe ethics expert panel.
